About the Glen Echo Park Partnership for Arts and Culture, Inc.

In June 2002, the National Park Service transferred management of Glen Echo Park to Montgomery County, Maryland. In turn, the County formed the nonprofit Glen Echo Park Partnership for Arts and Culture, Inc. to manage day-to-day operations and work with resident groups and artists to conduct programs at the Park. At its founding, the Partnership received startup funding from Montgomery County and the federal government. Since that time, Montgomery County, the state of Maryland and the federal government have funded renovations to Park facilities. Today, the Glen Echo Park Partnership, along with its National Park Service and Montgomery County partners, act as stewards of the Park, helping to maintain and enhance the high quality arts and education programming that makes Glen Echo Park a unique cultural resource in the Washington metropolitan area.

Mission

The Glen Echo Park Partnership for Arts and Culture, Inc. presents vibrant artistic, cultural and educational programs at Glen Echo Park and promotes the Park as a unique destination for our region’s diverse population. It nurtures a dynamic community of artists and performers while preserving and managing historic facilities within a National Park.

About Glen Echo Park

Located six miles northwest of Georgetown along the scenic Potomac River palisades, Glen Echo Park began in 1891 as a National Chautauqua Assembly “to promote liberal and practical education.” By 1900, the Park was on its way to becoming what would be the premier amusement park in the Washington area until 1968. Since 1971, under the National Park Service and the Glen Echo Park Partnership, the Park has featured year-round cultural and recreational activities.
Message from the Executive Director and President

It was not that long ago that Glen Echo Park was on the verge of collapse. Lucky for both the Park and our region, a unique experiment took form under the brilliant leadership and vision of former Montgomery County Executive Doug Duncan. That experiment was the Glen Echo Park Partnership for Arts and Culture, Inc.

It is hard to believe that the Partnership is celebrating its fifth anniversary. It is even harder to believe how much the Partnership has accomplished in five short years, both in terms of the physical transformation of Glen Echo Park and the remarkable growth of our programs. This 2007 Annual Report and Five-Year Retrospective reflects those accomplishments.

From the beginning, the leaders in the movement to save Glen Echo Park had a vision of a self-sustaining arts and recreation center offering something for everyone. Last year, as part of our strategic planning process, the Partnership Board put that vision into words: “Glen Echo Park attracts people of all ages and backgrounds to enjoy art, culture and learning presented by a vibrant community of artists, performers and teachers. Everyone can find and refresh the creative spirit amid Glen Echo Park’s architecturally unique and historic buildings, set in the natural beauty of the Potomac River’s palisades.”

Today, our visual arts, social dance and educational programs are thriving. Park attendance and class registration is steadily rising. More than 4,000 people rode the carousel at our annual Family Day. Nearly 62,000 people participated in our social dance programs this year—more dancers than any time in the Park’s history. Adventure Theatre returned to its home in the Arcade after a 2½-year renovation, ahead of schedule and in time for the fall season. And the landmark Yellow Barn has literally been rebuilt before our eyes. A chronology of our milestones of the past five years is listed on the following pages.

From an operational standpoint, we are proud to report that the Partnership is on sound financial footing. Our success is a tribute to the many individuals and businesses that have supported us over the past five years. To all our generous donors, members and visitors, we offer our heartfelt thanks.

As we reflect back on our first five years, we recognize many officials at the county, state and federal level, especially former Montgomery County Executive Duncan. Special thanks to his successor, current Montgomery County Executive Ike Leggett, and to past and current members of the County Council, who have made Glen Echo Park a priority, especially Howard Denis and his successor Roger Berliner. We are also grateful to Maryland state Senator Brian Frosh and Delegates Bill Bronrott and Susan Lee, as well as former Senator Ida Ruben and former Delegate Marilyn Goldwater, for their efforts to secure funding in Annapolis.

We dedicate this five-year report to the rebirth of Glen Echo Park, to the many people who made that transformation possible and to the Park’s bright future.

The federal government continues to play an important role in supporting this National Park. We acknowledge the strong leadership over the past five years of U.S. Senators Ben Cardin, Barbara Mikulski and Paul Sarbanes, as well as U.S. Representatives Connie Morella, Chris Van Hollen and Albert Wynn.

And where would we be without the National Park Service, which owns this site and continues in its role of maintaining the grounds and providing visitor services and historical interpretation. Special thanks to site manager Kym Elder and her staff, as well as her predecessor, Karen Pittleman. We appreciate the unwavering support of David Vela, Superintendent, George Washington Memorial Parkway, as well as his predecessor, Audrey Calhoun.

So important to the Park’s success, there are certain individuals and businesses we can always count on for financial and in-kind support for our annual Gala and throughout the year: Comcast, GEICO, Guest Services, Matters of Taste, Ogilvy Public Relations Worldwide, the Jim and Carol Trawick Foundation and Waltz Time.

Our dedicated board members—past and present—represent the best in community service. Special thanks to past Board Presidents Bill Roberts and Carol Trawick. Many others have volunteered their time and energy to the Park, notably Nancy Long, Bruce Douglas, Deborah Lang and Peter Somerville. We are also grateful to the Partnership’s hardworking staff, our program partners and the Glen Echo Park artists—together we have provided arts and education programs to thousands of participants.

We dedicate this five-year report to the rebirth of Glen Echo Park, to the many people who made that transformation possible and to the Park’s bright future.

There are many ways to plug into Glen Echo Park.

No one understands that better than Carol Trawick. As a longtime neighbor and friend of the Park, Trawick led the movement to preserve it for future generations, serving as the first chair of the Glen Echo Park Foundation and subsequently as founding president of the Glen Echo Park Partnership. In addition to countless hours, Trawick has been a generous financial donor through her company, Trawick and Associates, and more recently through the Jim and Carol Trawick Foundation. The couple’s generosity has funded everything from an online registration system to the first “Then and Wow” festival to the Park’s annual Gala. “Glen Echo Park has something for everyone,” she says. “There’s nothing like it. Once you fall in love with its unique architecture, creative energy and natural setting, there’s no turning back.”

Simply put, Glen Echo Park would not be what it is today without the support of Doug Duncan.

As Montgomery County Executive from 1994 to 2006, he was a principal architect of the plan to save the Park. Recognizing that it is a treasure not only in Montgomery County but for the entire region, Duncan conceived, advocated for and spearheaded a local, state and federal partnership that committed $20 million toward restoring the Park. He worked closely with the National Park Service on the management structure for the Park and was instrumental in the creation of the Glen Echo Park Partnership for Arts and Culture, Inc. “Glen Echo Park adds so much to the artistic vitality of the Washington region,” says Duncan. “It truly is a cultural treasure that had to be preserved.”

Becky Chasan, a scientist-turned-editor, went to her first contra dance in the Spanish Ballroom on Super Bowl Sunday, 2001.

Like so many before her, she was hooked. Although she recently moved from her home in northwest Washington to Columbia, Maryland, Chasan makes the 45-minute trip once or twice a week to dance in the Park. She knows others who come from as far away as Manassas and Baltimore. “With dancing, there’s a sense of pure joy,” she says. Her fiancé, Eric Van Buskirk, would no doubt agree. The two met contra dancing.

Like many teachers throughout the area, Helene Granof sees Glen Echo Park as an invaluable resource.

A resident of the Bannockburn neighborhood near Glen Echo Park for 37 years, she is in her 25th year of teaching at nearby Burning Tree Elementary School. Most recently, Granof brought a group of second graders to a program at Discovery Creek Children’s Museum of Washington, an environmental education site at the Park. “Our students love learning about the natural environment,” says Granof. After the program, the class had an opportunity to explore near Minnehaha Creek, which runs through the Park. Burning Tree Elementary also brings students to performances at the Puppet Co. Playhouse. “Glen Echo Park is a real treasure for local teachers and students,” says Granof.

Like his father before him, Tom Natelli is a successful businessman and philanthropist who cares deeply about the local community.

When his father died suddenly in 2004, the younger Natelli created the Anthony A. Natelli Foundation in his father’s memory to support local nonprofit organizations that were near and dear to his dad’s heart. At the same time, he began hosting an annual party at the Park’s Spanish Ballroom, an event that both provides substantial rental income to the Glen Echo Park Partnership and raises money for Natelli’s foundation. “What a setting!” Natelli says. “When it comes to special event venues, Glen Echo Park is the best kept secret in the region.” More than 400 guests attend the Natelli’s party every year; for many, it’s their first visit to the Park. “They can’t believe what a gem this is,” says Natelli. “Nowhere else in the area can you find a setting with this much character and charm.”

For the Jervis-Taylor family of Falls Church, Glen Echo Park is an intergenerational affair.

Margie Jervis and Paul Taylor, their eight-year-old son Noah and Margie’s mother Ida are frequent visitors to the Park’s puppet shows, family dances and the annual Washington Folk Festival. “There’s a great sense of freedom at Glen Echo Park,” says Jervis, an opera set designer and artist. “That’s probably why both artists and children like it so much. It’s like stepping into another world, a wonderful collage of nature, fanciful architecture, the delight of the spinning carousel and the sounds of dance music.” As a mother, Jervis loves the Park because “you can stay there all day. There is space to run around and play, space to have a picnic and space to sit down and be quiet and watch a performance. It’s pretty remarkable you can do all those things in one place.”

Margie Jervis, Paul Taylor, their son Noah, and Margie’s mother Ida on the Puppet Co. stage
Justin and Hannah Niles, who live around the corner from the Park, have literally grown up at Glen Echo. The youngsters, ages 5 and 9, look forward with great anticipation to the day each spring when the Dentzel carousel opens for the season. "At Glen Echo Park, everyone is family," says their mother Amy.

What Barbara Novak needed, she realized, was a hobby, a creative outlet. Something that would provide a different perspective and might add to the creativity she used in her work. As a psychiatrist with a busy practice that includes both children and adults, her work is intense, to say the least. Six years ago, a neighbor told her about the painting and drawing classes offered at Glen Echo Park's Yellow Barn Studio & Gallery. Although she lived only two miles down the road in Bethesda, she had never been to the Park. The painting class changed her life. Not long ago, Novak participated in her first art show. She sold 13 paintings.

Kym Elder knows Glen Echo Park’s history as well as anyone.

She knows that the Park was off limits to African Americans like herself until protests and a lawsuit led to its integration in 1961. “That sad chapter is a part of the Park’s history,” says Elder, who in 2004 was named National Park Service site manager at Glen Echo Park. But, she points out, “Glen Echo Park has been open to everyone for nearly 40 years. More than 5,000 people attended our Family Day this year. If you looked around the Park, you saw the diversity of the region represented. I see it as my responsibility to ensure that every single visitor who comes to the Park feels welcome here.”

David Vela, Superintendent, George Washington Memorial Parkway, and Glen Echo Park Site Manager Kym Elder

Back in the 1980s, a photographer friend invited Margo Reid to Glen Echo Park.

Like many visitors at that time, she found it a bit “scruffy and run down.” Yet, she recalls, “Even then the artists knew that Glen Echo was a special place.” In the following years, Reid—an award-winning filmmaker—signed up for a photography class and, in 2004, joined the board of the newly formed Glen Echo Park Partnership. This fall, she took over as its president. She has been an active participant in the Park’s rebirth and its renovation. “We’ve experienced remarkable growth in these five short years,” she says. “One measure is our dramatic budget increase from $350,000 to one-and-a-half-million dollars. Another is in the remarkable transformation of the Park’s buildings and a third is in the significant increase in our class registrations. The sense of place is part of what draws thousands of visual artists, dancers, school groups and families to this unique cultural and recreational resource. And our eclectic, quality programming certainly enhances the experience.”
